ChiME provides access to evidence-based therapy and engagement-based music programs that develop critical skills and foster self and social growth.

Therapeutic Model Programs

Classroom Music - Therapeutic Model (CMTM) is a program option for schools and organizations with large populations of children with disabilities, diagnoses, and/or delays. By placing a board-certified music therapist in the classrooms/groups, students can explore musical and nonmusical growth in an adapted, supportive, and therapeutic environment. Through an anti-bias framework, diverse repertoire, and engaging activities, ChiME's CMTM programming creates an opportunity for successful music-making in a community setting, with a focus on group goals.

Buddy Band is an inclusive group that aims to break down barriers by bringing individuals with and without disabilities together to make music and to form friendships. Each week, Buddies work not only on learning parts on their instruments, but on relationship-building skills and social skills. When possible, students are paired into "buddies" throughout a session of Buddy Band to promote social connections and to help students learn music parts. At the end of each session of Buddy Band, Buddies perform their chosen target songs live or via video recording!

Performance Model Programs

Classroom Music - Performance Model (CMPM) is a program option for schools seeking a combination of general and instrumental music education for PreK-8th grade students. Trained teaching artists provide weekly instruction to prepare students for two annual performances using voice, keyboards, and a variety of percussion instruments. In addition to developing musical skills such as singing, basic instrument proficiency, literacy, composition, and improvisation, the CMPM curriculum actively helps students practice life skills such as collaboration, problem-solving, critical thinking, self-regulation, and attention to detail. ChiME's anti-bias framework and student-centered, culturally-responsive pedagogy foster a learning environment where all students can succeed!

The ChiME Time Drumline is an after-school and summer program that provides students with additional opportunities to make music in an ensemble. Rehearsals are modeled after large-group drumlines and collaborative rock bands, and students use a variety of pitched and unpitched percussion instruments to perform engaging and diverse repertoire. In addition to musical skills, the ChiME Time Drumline promotes the development of leadership, collaboration, and personal responsibility.
